

Healthy Children needed for a Research Study

Researchers at the National Institutes of Health (NIH) Clinical Center are seeking healthy children for a study of growth and health behaviors.

- Purpose: To better understand growth in children and adolescents.
- Who: Healthy boys and girls between the ages of 8 and 17 years old.
- What: During the study, boys and girls will have a physical examination, fill out questionnaires, do a fitness test, have a hand x-ray, eat a meal, and give urine and blood samples. Parents/guardians will be informed about possible procedures and must give consent for participation. Compensation is provided.
- Where: The study takes place at the NIH Clinical Center in Bethesda, Maryland.
- Time required: Two screening visits. If eligible, boys and girls will be invited to participate in three additional studies visits and be seen once a year for the next six years.
